Tell Me About Yourself: Answer Examples

Use a short, relevant introduction supported by honest evidence.

A useful structure

Present: your current role, study or direction.

Evidence: one or two experiences relevant to the job.

Future: why this role is a logical next step.

Fictional graduate example

I recently completed a business degree, where I enjoyed organising group projects. In our final research project, I maintained the task tracker and helped prepare a clear presentation. I am now looking for an entry-level project support role where I can use those skills and learn from an experienced team.

Fictional customer service example

I have experience helping customers understand their options and resolving everyday issues. I focus on listening, explaining clearly and following up on what I promise. This role interests me because it would let me support customers while developing deeper product knowledge.

Your version

My present situation: _____

My relevant example: _____

Why this role: _____

Practise the structure rather than memorising an invented story.